

RESTELLI TRAPPED

IN WOODS

A man believed by the police of Quincy and Bramire to be Louis Restelli, the Quincy murderer, was in a swamp near the Rice & Hutchins shoe factory at East Bramire, shortly before 2 o'clock this afternoon. The swamp was surrounded by fully 300 policemen, firemen and other citizens, under the direction of Mayor Shea of Quincy.

At least three persons saw the man, who is being hunted. He was almost famished and leagard. When given water he gulped it down as though he had not drunk for days. He pleaded for food. When a description of Restelli was read to those persons they all said:

'That's the man—that's the man'.

SUSPECT GETS TW O HOURS' LLEWAY.

But it was two hours between the last time the strange man was seen and the time the actual hour began, and it was

Joseph Regan, a prominent citizen of the town, said he had never seen the man in the past 10 years. He said he was not sure if the man was the same person who was in the photo, but he was sure the man was the same person who was in the photo. He said he was sure the man was the same person who was in the photo.

He said the man was probably an Italian or a black man, a black man, and he carried a large revolver and that he was wearing a military uniform.

Man Hunters Are All Armed.

The man hunters are armed with shotguns, rifles and handguns as well as all of the weapons in Bratislava. Revolutionaries and thugs were sent in from every direction and the hardware stores were visited and depleted of their stores.

They were sent in from No. 10 Bratislava street, South Bratislava, told the following day by a spokesman for the government.

"About 6 o'clock this morning I was leaving with my father and a neighbor, Joseph McLaughlin of Liberty avenue. The neighbor was an American, an American on Pearl Street. After the wagon was loaded I was left in the cold north the two men came back."

"I was sitting on the ground when the man came to me in the morning. His face appeared. I then heard a rifle, followed by a shot. The unknown man said to the man and the man said
